

Trust in God but tie your camel first, also has an esoteric meaning. Surrender to what is and trust in God is the first step in your growth. The ego only dissolves in let go. First it needs to develop to its full creative potential. The best way to tie your camel is different for everyone. The traditional way of yoga is very effective because it strengthens, purifies and prepares all systems, at the same time as it develops the ego. Yoga is not for everyone, any creative action will do. The only difference is time. Yoga is the shortcut to tying your camel. However, it has the disadvantage of creating a spiritual ego which is more tenacious than a worldly one. Whatever method suits you is the right way for you. The essential point to understand is that your ego must come to full flowering before surrender happens. This stops you from falling in the quagmire of piety and hypocrisy that prevents serious spiritual people from developing their authenticity.

Morality is reverence for all life. Society has a right to protect itself from violent and disturbed people, but no right to interfere with anyone's lifestyle. Most religious moralists are anti-life and hypocritical. They kill and eat animals unnecessarily, while trying to enforce their ancient scriptures on everyone else. God is life. Reverence for all life is the only morality for the New Dawn of consciousness. A world without violence and private property offers the opportunity for the first century of the millennium to be the golden age of the Buddhas.
