

MASTERS

Enlightenment is originally an Indian phenomenon.

For thousands of years the flame of awareness has been passed from master to disciple. This relationship is one of the deepest commitment. The disciple understands that the master is his only hope for freedom from ego. The master knows from his own experience the tricks and traps for the ego to get stuck in. As spiritual work intensifies, the ego of the disciple always has a reaction to the master. He is the authority figure. Hence, the master insists on surrender to his spiritual authority. If the disciple is allowed to put his negativity on the master, the work is impossible. The relationship has worked well. Just by living, meditating and surrendering with the master, the flame of awareness jumps to the disciple when the time is right.

& Disciples

The downside of this arrangement is that some gurus have a tendency to self-aggrandise. The surrender, love and devotion of disciples goes to their heads. Gurus and masters become impressed with their apparent power to influence and transform disciples. In India the guru is deified. God is far away, the master is the door to God and is often worshipped as a god by devotees. The disciple is also damaged by submitting to the authority of the guru. He loses respect for his own divine connection and gives his power to the master. Every master has a different teaching. Their disciples sacrifice their intelligence and surrender to the teaching of the master, even when it is irrational. Ultimately, ignorant followers of dead masters kill followers of other dead masters in the name of God. The master/disciple drama was an important part of the age of separation, the Kali Yuga. The next step is the age of Truth, the Sat Yuga. Now God is about to end the master/disciple drama and replace it with direct connection to Source. Buddhas will still have essential work with seekers. They are channels and mediums for divine energy. They help seekers to grow quickly, just by sitting silently together. They give guidance and support for the journey of awakening and they share energetic information from the Beyond, to bring consciousness to Earth. Soon, they will fully experience that God is the only master and teach surrender only to Him. This new relationship is respectful, loving and free from all power trips
